eText initiative planned for fall

BY AMANDA STELLA

A new four-year co-op degree program and e-textbook initiative many on textbooks were two of the many topics discussed at Concordia College Board of Governors meeting on Nov. 20.

Cyber security, one of the most popular forms of modern degrees in the 21st century, whether it be for a company, organization or a country as a whole, will make an appearance at Concordia College in the near future. David Morrison would like the college is hoping to launch a new four-year co-op degree program in cyber security and intelligence to further the college's diversity in education.

"There has been a lot of work put into this program," said John Tibbles, president of the college. "The plan is to offer the new program in the fall of 2019, with enrollment projections gradually climbing over time as the public becomes more aware of its availability."

In addition, business board members were told textbooks will be evolving at the college. A new committee in association with the textbook, involving something like e-books, e-textbooks, can affect traditional textbooks for introductory programs. The plan will be tested with a pilot group of 12 to 15 programs in the fall of 2019. The aim is to make textbooks for students more accessible, affordable and sustainable. Algoma, Royal and Lakehead colleges have already implemented eTexts and received great feedback.

"It will save students off to $6 per book off the cost of what a textbook textbook would be," said Tracy Holloman, executive dean of the School of Business and Media Design.

Concordia Students has been consulted and approved of the change, agreeing that it will be great benefit for the majority of the students.

"There was officially released will be available as most operating systems automatically update their tablets and smartphones. Each eText will have a charging function of its device and will be a mandatory purchase before the start of the school year.

Teachers of each program with eText knowledge will be able to see whether or not students are taking advantage of these eText. However, the board has said that at the moment there is no ability to "flip" an student, to see what specific pages they are reading. Teachers can easily observe if they have been opened on a device or not.

He's making a list and checking it twice

BY ROBERT JAMES

Christmas marks the media stage. At Concordia College, students were asked whether they believed they would be on Santa's naughty or nice list.

"I'd like to think I'm on the nice list," said Andrew Drinn, a second-year recreation and leisure studies student. "I always put others before myself and I try to help out anyone in any way I can."

The common response among students was that they try their best to be a good person and help those in need, which put them on the nice list.

"I would say I'm on the nice list," said Melissa Kotter, a second-year community justice and services student. "I'm always thinking about others and helping out as much as I can."

Hanmer Nostola, a second-year recreation, leisure studies student, was uncertain which list he would be on.

"I wouldn't put me on the naughty list, then I'm definitely naughty in Santa's eyes," he said. "In terms of being a [Naughty] child, I think I'm on the nice list for my everyday actions and general attitude."

However, one student believed that he might be on Santa's naughty list, because he does not give back.

"It's difficult to ask for something and not give something back during the holiday season," said Bryan Flannery, a second-year recreation, leisure studies student. "I actually don't like [Christmas], everyone gets like gifts than I do. The Christmas spirit and cheer I like. Just like anything else the buildup is the most fun."

If students could ask Santa for one wish, the most popular response was money or for him to pay off their bills and credit cards. However, Drinn said his wish would be for others who use less than him to enjoy their Christmas.

"Honestly just having my family around – that's the best gift of all," he said. "For me Christmas is about family and giving back. For a few years, my family and I have helped out with Christmas hamper as people who don't have a lot of money can have a nice Christmas too."

Family and giving were the most common answers amongst the students as to what the biggest reason seems to be.

"I usually just wish family and peace," said Lester. "And being able to see the smile on everyone's face when they open their gifts."

Christmas gifting has been playing on the radio, which means that the hours of resilience will continue on the radio.

"I hope everyone has an amazing safe and warm Christmas with their loved ones," said Drinn.

Waterloo campus set to expand

BY JESSICA CLARK

Conestoga College Council members were shown positive news plans and other details concerning the upcoming expansion of the Waterloo campus at a council meeting on Nov. 22.

The Waterloo North Campus Expansion Project is expected to increase the number of full-time students at the Waterloo campus from just over 3000 to more than 3500 and will be open by September 2016.

"I know the growth will be welcome there," said Andrew Goodridge, Faculty of studies and experiential education on the expansion.

"It is going to be planned so we're going to maximize the expansion," said John Tibbles, president of Conestoga College, adding that this will be achieved by completing the project in four phases.

The campus will focus mainly on IT, great services and food, with hospitality students helping up more. There will be multiple new culinary labs located in the new expansion and the current residence block, well rooms.

The space for 17 dorms that Waterloo wants to offer family for growth at the future site and double beds in the Doms in eight.

UNFC Language Instruction for Non-English to English will also be part of the expanding campus where there will be a child-minding centre available for students as they can attend class for a few hours and bring their children. The child-minding centre will include an indoor area for the children as well.

The expansion, which was originally going to be developed into a residential centre, out of the existing Waterloo campus, will now consist of a modern, integrated design with four stories.

"Very practically, if you go five stories your whole floor surface regulation will add a ceiling and a half dollar," said Tibbles, explaining the rationale behind reducing the expansion to four stories.

However, the new expansion raises the question of parking a large amount of students in those who commute to their classes at Conestoga's Doms campus. When the construction is finished, there will be 1250 spaces parking open. However, because Waterloo campus is located downtown, there are expectations for more students, staff and the city to use transit. There are also talks of having nearby spaces for college parking.

"We give everyone a Vango, but seriously, we're looking around," said Tibbles.

The whole front of the campus site will have solar panels added to the modern design and the south will be green.

The food services area will also make room open overlooking the busy field it currently has, and will include a Tim Hortons and Subway Conestoga Students Inc. are also looking into having an extra space to dedicate to the students.

Construction is expected to get underway next month.

OPEN HOUSE A MEANINGFUL Q AND A SESSION

Rec centre could be paid off sooner

BY SCOTT BURGESS

The new athletics and recreation centre may be paid off earlier than anticipated, according to a report given in the Conestoga Students Inc. (CSI) board of directors.

At a meeting of the board on Nov. 28, Mike Denning, Conestoga vice-president of student affairs, said the original estimation was the mortgage would be paid off in 30 years. The estimate was based on the assumption that enrollment would increase by two per cent every year and that the student priority fee would increase at a rate of three per cent every year.

The student priority fee is part of an levy the project, maintenance and service fees are considered in a short benefit to students CSI and the college which supports the alternative what the money is used for.

The recreation centre is also paid for in part by the maintenance and service fee, which is mandatory for full-time students at the Cambridge and Galt campuses.

The new report, which suggested that payment of the recreation centre could be over a year earlier than expected, was based on the assumption of a nearly two per cent increase in tuition. Denning includes the student priority fee and maintenance and service fee. According to Denning,

A student walks into the Conestoga Student Recreation Centre at the Galt campus on Nov. 29. Conestoga Students Inc. board members were told at a Nov. 28 meeting that the centre's mortgage may be paid off early.

that was an attempt to keep estimates conservative.

Because of the recent increase in enrollment, we find ourselves in a lot more of a flexible position," Denning said. "This means we have a bit more leeway when it comes to the fee increases and hopefully the facility is good for."

Other factors affecting the payment schedule included a lower mortgage rate than was expected. According to Denning, the estimate for the mortgage rate was five per cent, but the actual rate is about half of that.

The new recreation centre was funded by both CSI and the college with a fixed cost of about $115 million. Once the building is paid off CSI will be responsible for the center's operating fees.

Galaxy of Gifts raises money for Lutherwood

BY SCOTT BURGESS

The 2012 Galaxy of Gifts event (there was a very special one) had a small turnout, but a big heart. Held at the Luther Village on the Park retirement home on Nov. 28, the event featured approximately 40 vendors selling everything from Christmas wreaths to baked goods.

The event also gave residents an easy alternative to the more cumbersome and potentially dangerous option of leaving the retirement home to do their Christmas shopping. And there was nothing stopping them from coming and visiting the market. Everyone was also invited to a barbecue lunch.

This year was the second time the fundraiser was held, knowing that last Galaxy of Gifts fundraiser a small band of us all decided to team up by organization, or organization. CSI (Conestoga) supporters and the like to have goal reasonable. Each year a goal of $10 000 was set, and next, all profits from the winter tables because admission at free. But there was also food and drinks available for a price.

Lutherwood is a non-profit organization that helps the community by providing mental health, employment, housing and family services.

Galaxy of Gifts, the "smallest fundraiser" is as sold because of its success. It's now Lutherwood because of the funds go to the welfare of the veterans, which is just our room in the retirement home. But supporters and organizers Debbie Koen were able to help those veterans out, as well as throughout the rest of the province.

The vendors products came in a huge variety and included: soaps, crafts, art, jewelry, bubble bath and more. One vendor was selling special "ugly tree" Christmas wreaths and another vendor was selling a beautiful selection of vibrantly colored flowers and plants.

The biggest beneficiary of this event was Lutherwood themselves. Lutherwood is a non-profit organization that helps the community by providing mental health, employment, housing and family services.

They run a youth shelter and provide shelving and remodeling for their facilities from mental health issues. They also provide a range of support services and help people look for their own homes. But Lutherwood has their own Credit and Family Foundation, which raises over $1 million each year the Lutherwood's community work.

If you want to help support them you can donate at lutherwood.ca. If you want to know more why not attend one of their events? Visit lutherwood.ca/events for event details.

Millard's girlfriend gets off easy

BY CAROLE TRUDOU

The Tudor-Millard case has kept Ontarians on their toes for years. The case has been just as gripping as the Robert Pickton or Paul Bernardo cases, and is a tangled mystery and confusion. Now finally, new information and new developments seem to wrap up many fine months, keeping the story fresh and reader's interest and keeping the Trudeau family in our hearts and prayers.

Tom Romeo of Amherstburg was arrested in 2003 by Millard and his accomplice, Mark Smith, after taking the two of them on a best date of a month. He was trying to kill.

Now comes the breaking of Millard's girlfriend's trial. Christiane Trudeau had been a witness almost a year after Romeo's murder but she walked away with nothing but a minor laceration and a green nail varnish. She pleaded guilty in a reduced charge of obstructing justice by destroying evidence. Trudeau had helped Millard stop Romeo's suicide attempt, and she helped keep his fingerprints and a DNA matching incriminating evidence of Millard and Smith. She maintained that she did not know there had been a transfer when she did it.

She was convicted with some novel proof to the trial, the four months on jail before the charged had, and the last year she spent under house arrest. No, more than her own unanswered emails, and she received a sentence of a year and one day to go, and she judge said she already served her time.

Is that enough punishment?

As this glimmer of apparent justice like the Trudeau family fully supported the sentence as they avoided serving triple and great damage possible three years trial.

According to a May 21, CTV News article, the judge Superior Court Justice Tom Stinson, and Trudeau's parole plan was "a 'supervised managing犯' (in her words). According to the court transcript, Trudeau was assigned into the Parole Board without any revoking it, and she has suffered by the last three years because of it.

Trudeau is getting a fresh start. From the evidence that appears to be a flat and just sentence. Hopefully she has learned from this lesson, a government's intransigence displayed by Trudeau, and needs the others to give her. Good things happen in the company of good people. Keep company with good people, and avoid the bad.

Cups cause controversy

Since 1997 Starbucks has had a different design for their holiday cups.

Last year, they had the plain red cup which was apparently too subtle because of other religious and cultural reasons. The cups didn't blatantly say "Merry Christmas". People were going to Starbucks and asking for "Merry Fucking Christmas" on their cups to make the items unashamedly flaunt their religion and beliefs in the world.

This year, the coffee chain is associated with people calling themselves "Taco's" and it's according to their vice-president-of-global-customer-care that on their decorative paper cups, the 18 designs were made by women in other countries in order to celebrate women and diversity.

They had happened to be holiday-themed, and it's covered in colorful images of checkered lights, another has gone gold and some have gold stars, there's a light, white, glowing star on a dark base.

In fact, Starbucks released a different holiday cup design. It was a green cup, with drawings of different people on the green cup. Starbucks territory, "Friends, families, and customers come together in our communities... whether we're in offices or at home," when they're around the design of the cup.

Carole
Trudeau
Gigilson

But after the company received a huge backlash from the public, who said the green was an Islam symbol and the company was supporting the "War on Christmas", Starbucks changed their model and went with the 18 hand-decorated cups instead.

These 18 cups may have been harmonious with president-elect Hilary Clinton, but with Donald Trump, being the future president of the U.S., Starbucks' obvious support of Clinton had the company removed by an overwhelming number of anti-Trump supporting customers.

It seemed as though it was a move to reflect a human to avoid "Trump" on his cup and the human refusal, the customer called the not-so-white discrimination.

Soon there was a Trump Cup hat being sold online by Romeo Twizler over Toledo, Alaska, who got a hold of the logo and invented one. Starbucks called the cup as the guy for wanting Trump in his cup, who goes to get a "Trump Cup" that is a "monstrosity".

It's at least one of two things happening, as this is not a joke. People are seriously trying to prevent what a cup looks like. Plus, it's the culture now in the states. What's next? The Starbucks logo died?

It's getting out of hand. Why can't people just agree to disagree? Why can't we, as a society stop blowing everything out of proportion?

When I go to Starbucks, I order my drink, I check it, and then I leave the cup out. I know it's Starbucks and I just want to make sure that this particular I would just stop going to Starbucks if this cup is the worst thing in your world right now, you could go home and make your own hot mess, and not break your amazingly bright Christmas tree.

First Nations fights back

BY MATTHEW SWARZENSKI

On Nov. 22 an aboriginal community took those rights to the Supreme Court of Canada against The National Energy Board and said it has the right to decide how First Nations land is used.

For 80 years the Canadian government has used The National Energy Board (NEB) to get around operating leases with First Nations on the basis that they do not fit the term of what the government can do on their land concern pipeline and resource extraction. According to Myronigan Story, Conestoga College's Aboriginal Services manager and the traditional knowledge keeper from Chippewas of the Thames who had a traditional territory granted to the First Nations by the Crown, no other Canadian does and never has had claim to say that pipelines are built on.

One of the main disputes at the Law 28 pipeline that runs from Alberta to Montreal, is as operated by Enbridge, the largest transporter of crude oil in Canada.

"They put in the pipeline 40 years ago. They were asked to do so and it's my traditional territory. We asked the Canadian government to sit down with us and talk about it and they didn't want to do that. What they did is they just build a third party (SNC) to make those decisions, and so they allowed Enbridge to run that off."

The NEB said the Canadian government, they must negotiate with us and that negotiation with the government of Canada didn't take place. When we look to the Federal Court of Appeals we ultimately lost. We only had one out of three judges support the case. They've put over billions of dollars for 80 years and every municipality who paid tax dollars enough for us, and to our traditional territory," he said.

According to Story, not only are pipeline owners free passing by raising pipelines through First Nations land, but they do it along at the same time as they're doing it at the same time as they're doing it. As Enbridge is only a majority of the company here, making the bulk of the money. However, with North Dakota, the Canadian pipelines have been cleared for almost a generation and the debate is now why these pipelines are allowed to endanger First Nations land without permission or compensation.

Section 28 of the Constitutional Act of Ontario (par. 2) was introduced by Dellerit Riley in 1993, the previous chief of the National Indian Brotherhood and, monthly editor to Conestoga College.

The existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada may be recognized and affirmed.

For present certainty, subsection (1) ("treaty rights") contains rights that may exist by way of land claims agreements or may be as acquired." Another section of the charter, section 28, is designed to shield the rights and freedoms of the First Nations people. First Nations in Hampshire would include establishing a system like The National Energy Board, which, although has other laws, has primarily been used to stop several negotiations regarding to treaty claims.

The Canadian First Nations is trying to avoid a situation like North Dakota, where protesters are trying to prevent the Dakota Access Pipeline from being constructed, by instituting strict legal consequences to them. They are also prepared to defend their land if needed. It's this mindset that's influenced Riley, a former legal counsel for First Nations rights in Canada.

Riley was born in The Chippewas of the Thames and went to a residential school for five years, where he was starved and abused, mostly resulting resulting out of fight with other kids going through perhaps four to five schools. He was released to work and play, finally serving enough up for his last day at 14 years of age. He doesn't like the Neponess Falls residential school name because they didn't care for the Indians here, even after moving to Detroit. He constantly purchased the government and read any book he could get his hands on.

In the U.S. he directly followed the treatment of Indians. "You know it was a case they would send the dogs on them for processing, separate water fountains, everything was segregated. But I was so shocked that reading why they were standing up and not giving up thinking about up here and how were not in the same situation. I know it was wrong; in fact and everybody pushed into concentration camps under Hitler with the Germans, actually had education. All we could do was sleep through the war."

Riley can recall American fighting back for their rights and it changed him. He watched the movement grow, watched segregation in park, finally break and dominate. It was then when he made his will's promise.

"I had myself if I ever had the chance to go back home I would break the fight and if not sort of a pipe dream back then, it wouldn't happen, but I had no accident back there and decided to come home to Canada."

This experience gave him a view on racism which served, aged along with his legal skills when he moved back to Canada with his wife.

The racism was against the blacks, they were colored in to show the many of racism, a shouldn't exist in there. It should be used to put there respect. But it's a very major place when you have an Indian across on the city of Detroit and everybody targets him can trust to the physics of Canadian reserved," said Riley.

After working at the Union of Indigenous Indians he became an expert on land claims and Indian rights. Using this information he became a prominent legal activist for the First Nations of Canada. Following a personal creed that once the government recognized and wanted to negotiate a resolution in his own interests of court he would refuse, and make sure the courts officially recognized whatever arrangement he had done. The Canadian government perpetuating toward First Nations people.

This creed still stands today helped him procure Section 28 on the Charters of Rights and Freedoms. It was then smart moves and this argued, which prompted the death of Canada in 1993 Riley to run for their leadership. He lost the election, but was ready to take on the legal work for those whom he believed was the best outcome for him to the bats.

"I was approached, I got people working towards change," he said.

The first that the pipeline protesters ended up to even is one of no surprise in Riley can believe his Native dying with the government and our protection.

"They always like to throw you against a body that will break because it doesn't have a backbone," he said.

"The folks are fighting against us, of course, but as the same time they have a mutual obligation to protect our rights. Some of us lose we still have our rights. We do everything by agreement, and that should be never forgotten in the last place."

Riley's dedication to getting back done instead of moving up mistakes, has led him to personally repeat the government's original motion package for residential school survivors which pays out a minimum of $10,000.

"I don't want their money. I want my story to tell out to the world."

The Supreme Court hearing took place on Nov. 28, but it will take up to six months for a verdict to be announced. Riley previously set up tests on Parliament Hill and gave update on the proceedings as they happened. Present in the court argued, Riley pointed toward the staff working on his office with pride and said,

"We're going to walk on with that single staff and place it next to their flag, and there's how many going to start this process."

Inter Arts Matrix has it all

BY HEATHER MELVILLE, VALLEYCAST

Lindella Stellmacher is a graduate student and arts teacher who has had a hand, or many play roles including The Notebook Project and Erophemera. She did the projection design for Lord Fauntleroy, a play featuring just two actors, recently performed at the Central Theatre for the Performing Arts in Kitchener.

She is also the artistic director of an art group called Inter Arts Matrix, a non-profit shared-table arts organization which uses its own research and art to create new ways to understand the world around us. They have a Friday space dedicated to data so that they can host and work with a variety of artists for their various projects.

"Right now we have about 40 studio spaces where 40 people working out of here. All professionals artists and craftspeople, it's been ranging from ceramics, to metals, sculpture, electronics, web designers, people working in media technology. You name it, we have it here."

One of her newest projects is Erophemera, which was shown in all its glory at the City of Waterloo Amphitheatre on Oct. 28.

Erophemera is a digital device you construct that combines sound when used. It uses a standard-looking interface which hooks up to a projector. The program allows you to select between a pencil, pen and watercolor brush. Each creates a different sound, as does the different brush strokes and shades of pen or color. Stellmacher, Kines Engel, the project's developer and someone else, and Miles Thompson, the sound design coordinator have worked on Erophemera since 2013. They individually researched dozens of instruments who seemed to have the right fit and sound that were looking for. Some of them sounds have been manipulated to suit the various sounds and the different music changes.

"What's interesting for the instrumentals, or voices is that they hear the sound they make and in a way the instrument itself can't. It's interesting for them to play with their instrument in that way," Stellmacher said. "So this is what I mean when I say every instrument has a voice."

They didn't create the Erophemera from scratch, however, although Stellmacher recognises the potential to market such a creation.

Inter Arts Matrix will be holding a winter session on Dec. 16 from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. in a venue that is yet to be announced. Keep an eye on their website soon for more information for further details.

for the judges and audience to see who would be the winner.

The final show was full of emotion and passion, raising these bands to the air and lifting them out of their knees. Even the crowd was getting into it by jumping along and clapping their hands.

Audience members could use their tickets to vote and people watching the live stream could vote online. The Milwaukee performance, during which judges named the band, received the lowest in the top 10 shows.

However, not everyone would be going home with the $25,000 in prizes that night. The top eight were reduced to four: Jonathan Parryson, Craig Nichols, Matthew Dobies and John McKenna. Moira would perform again.

Once again standing on stage the top four eagerly awaited the results. Bruno took home the title trophy and never-ending press that included time with an agent, time at a recording studio and money to make the original song.

Condor to Team Ontario

BY MELANIE LAMBERT

In Canada today it can be one of the most talked about sports. Jason Bauer can talk about it with the best of them. And thanks to his knowledge, the 16-year-old hockey enthusiast was selected as one of three Ontario players for Sunday's Under-18 National Championships.

Bauer has been involved with sports since he was four years old. He participated in multiple sports including basketball, power skating, baseball, soccer and lacrosse. While at university she was the team's goalie as well as a goalie trainer.

"I think it was just natural. I'm pretty active and I've always been active. My siblings played sports, my parents grew up the opportunity to get involved in sports. So for me it's a way of life that's just kind of how I am, which is pretty cool," said Bauer.

The process of achieving the title of coach for Team Ontario started when Bauer applied in early spring last year. After that she was selected to attend a camp in July, which was a selection camp for the players and the general coaches were evaluated.

"We worked with a coach mentor who used to be the head coach for the national women's hockey team, the Olympics team. So the mentors worked with the coaches and both evaluated the players. Over Thanksgiving weekend my dad camped basically with my mom in preparation for the tournament. That was two months ago," said Bauer. "The event is run by Hockey Canada and each province sends three to the tournament so it's really hard to see the talent, not only from the players but the level of coaching than others."

As a player, Bauer believes her lesson experience has taught her more than she would have thought. She said her experience has learned through her coaching career helped her see that just like in a game, if life goes up or you face challenges, "This can give a good perspective on what's your goals."

"The same the process of getting to that point. You have goals that you set, and you see if you can reach those and you evaluate to see if you can make those the next time and how to improve from that," said Bauer.

She has even tried to bring the lesson she's learned to Camosun College. She makes her department, but, like a family and their close opinions and perspectives are important. She believes that makes her feel more confident with her ideas. Bauer has moved on from her planning days and is now focused on coaching and the college. She is currently coaching the Camosun Revolution in the Provincial Women's Hockey League, which is the level girls play before going to university or college. Coaching high school girls has proved tough for Bauer with the girls' vulnerability. She said they often worry about failing or not being good enough. Bauer says her coaching tactics to break through to them.

"I try to do the weak easy all these things so I make myself vulnerable to the players right away and I'll tell them 'I'll forget a skill when I'm drawing it on the board' I will tell them it's OK to make mistakes. That's what try to tell them accountable as well as as definitely a winning set," said Bauer. "I have high expectations for the players that I coach but I don't think its fair to me or a coach to ask them to meet those expectations if I don't have them to back it up. If not we have to build the relationship and trust first and then you really push them towards change."

Bauer's ultimate goal is having two things. She says the coaching role where you teach the kids how to play with the skills and the. Then there's the managerial side which Bauer says to gets the players trust in her and then becomes better she moves on to the coaching role. She coaches by teaching her players' growth, improvement, accountability and dedication.

Although Bauer doesn't like to acknowledge her accomplishments in her sports career, she thinks it was great to be part of Team Ontario.

Two years ago, Bauer played Division 1 hockey before all those things were really great experiences but I just feel really lucky to be able to have had them. People tell me they are accomplished and I say absolutely, why? And they are just something I like to do. I don't really think twice about it," said Bauer.

Her advice to others: Work hard because it is critical and it creates opportunities.

Sunday soccer added to intramurals

BY MIRIAM RICHARD

Intercollegiate sports at Cambridge College's Guelph campus will be expanding to include weekend intramural games on the new year that will involve 100 participants registered during the fall semester. Since the number of players who registered last year and the student association were reviewing a continuation membership $20 million, it was only a matter of time until the association found within the budget room for expansion as well.

Because soccer is easy to run and it doesn't require a referee crew, it will be the only sport offered for students on weekends in 2009. This means players will now have more incentive to participate in all they wish. Fall term students are welcome to sign a team up or just play themselves, or both the popularized scheduled Wednesday night winter league, and the new Sunday soccer league, which will take place from 12 to 4 p.m.

Also, if it ends up being a success in terms of popularity, new and participating students can expect other sports to begin putting schedules on weekends as well.

"We're really looking at trying to offer more opportunities for the students to participate in intramural programs," said Jason Rossie, the recreation services faculty coordinator.

"We don't currently have any pickup on Friday Saturday Sunday so we've had to limit our pickup to one if we something that will be taught after by the school. Hopefully we will be able to take some feedback and get some more information, so we can take that into consideration when moving forward with extra sports." The current method of surveying is still being determined by registrants, but a mass email to current intramural participants or even the whole under 18 body are possibilities. As well, all students who participate in the new Sunday afternoon container bags will be able to rate those experiences at the end of the semester so that the recreation centre staff can make adjustments and improve the experience.

"I would definitely be playing Sunday's [12] because I like the chance to play more, but it's kind of nice to have some things to look forward to at the end of the week besides all my work," said Shayne French, a current extramural soccer participant.

"I would normally start off up a bit later than most though. I play at six every week and I like it," he added.

Although weekend sports have been held on the college before, it hasn't happened for many years. In fact, prior to the mid-1990s, students at Cambridge University found that only 1 per cent of students used what was previously a Friday night. That is now a thing of the past. However, despite great community fitness and recreational programs, the schools' growth has limited its maximum capacity during weekdays, making the weekend an ideal time for the day sports.

"I think, since we have been open at September students have really continued the bonding since the change and really enhanced participation being able to come by. The dragon sports are always really busy and some of our intramural sports over time and last, so I encourage students to sign up early if they want to get in," Rossie said.

Anyone wishing to participate in intramurals next semester, which includes badminton, basketball, beach volleyball, field hockey, football, squash and flag football, will be able to do so at the new year immediately following the winter break. Most sports will then begin 3-3 weeks after registration is opened. However, lacrosse badminton are still being completed at this time.

Two Cambridge College intramural hockey players face off in the first regular round game at the Arctic Sportplex in Kitchener on Nov. 23. The Greenwood Frocks won the league championship, finishing with seven wins, no losses and 17 goals.

"The focus is on trying to encourage participation and get students here on Sundays and making practice adjustments going forward. We really just always want to

College going greener

BY SCOTT BURNHAM

Community will be going green next year. The University Students for Environmental Action approved a plan to create an environmental work room from March 2014-2017.

"We think educating the students about their impact on the environment is very important," said director Brittany Lamm.

"This was something that students really seem to want."

In the AGM (annual general meeting) there was a lot of material."

Group who presented the plan on behalf of the board appreciated the nomination and there was significant interest expressed on the idea.

The plan to hold an environmental work room was approved by the board.

Details of what the work will include have not been decided yet, but the report by the environmental committee made several suggestions. These included a reader for park or campus clean up, an educational corner table and a garbage audit.

The audit would look at where waste ends up through the college, waste something for recyclable items that were placed into garbage bins and putting them in the proper place.

It was suggested by director Anne Culan that representatives from the Region of Waterloo's waste management division be invited to help educate students on the issue of waste bins.

"This will give us an opportunity to remind students about the changes coming in March," said Shanon Mihal, assistant general manager of CCI.

Starting in March, participation in Waterloo Recycle will occur every two weeks instead of weekly, while blue and green bins will continue to be collected every week.
